

Schedule of fees

The KU Field Station affords tremendous opportunities for environmental research, teaching and outreach. Diverse natural ecosystems, managed habitats, experimental facilities, laboratories, classrooms, meeting rooms and limited accommodations are available to individuals and groups whose activities are consistent with the Field Station's mission.

The Field Station is administered and managed by the Kansas Biological Survey at the University of Kansas (KU). The KU Endowment Association owns most lands in the Field Station system. Operation and maintenance of the Field Station is supported principally by KU, the Biological Survey and user fees. The Field Station, in some circumstances, may provide support to persons or groups lacking funds to pay user fees. For questions related to use, including use of the Armitage Center, cabins or related to research use, contact Sheena Parsons (785-864-6070, sheenap@ku.edu).

IMPORTANT

1. Fees for site use, facilities, equipment, staff time, the Armitage Center and housing should be included in grant proposals.
2. Researchers are required to consult with Field Station personnel before submitting proposals involving the KU Field Station.
3. All requests for use must be made at least two weeks in advance. Fees and availability of facilities are subject to change.
